Q: Commutator subgroup Let G be a group, H be a subgroup of G , and let $C_G(H)$ be the centralizer of H in G . Then $C_G(H) = \{g \in G \mid gh = hg \text{ for all } h \in H\}$. I need to prove that $C_G(H)$ is a normal subgroup of G . So I take two arbitrary elements g_1 and g_2 in $C_G(H)$ and have to show that $[C_G(H), g_i] = 1$ for $i=1,2$. Now from the definition of the commutator I get that $[g_1, g_2] \in Z(C_G(H)) \cap H$ (which is actually a subgroup of H) which is what I want to prove. So my question is: Is the set I'm taking a subgroup of H because it holds for all $h \in H$? I'd like to know, because it confused me a little bit.

A: Yes. Let $h \in H$, then $g_1 g_2 h = g_2 g_1 h = g_2 h g_1 = h g_1 g_2 = h g_1 g_2$. Therefore, $gh \in H$ for all $h \in H$, because H is a subgroup.

Q: Why am I getting \ in front of my JQuery? I'm trying to use JQuery on a page to translate the page so it is in another language. I have an input field which I want to translate when I click on it. Here is my JQuery `$("#webdev").click(function () { $('#webdev').attr('value', 'webdev'); $('#webdev').attr('title', 'webdev'); });` Here is my HTML

No-nonsense wallpaper changer that doesn't get in your way. Automatic screen brightness and rotation control with customizable presets. Simple user interface, easy to use. Needs a couple of features, could use some improvements. FluidCam It's very simple, it's free and it's a plugin for the free VideoLAN player. Creating a decent and easy to use screen recording for video-casts is easier than you might think. The video player should run in the system tray and you need to launch it only once and the application will be ready to record your screen (and the sound) as soon as the VideoLAN Player has been launched and the plugin loads. You should choose the configuration settings for the plugin on the recording screen, but you can also automatically launch it at system startup and adjust its settings. The last couple of months I have tried several software on this platform; Google keep, Macro Recorder, dole, etc. I prefer this application, and it has a couple of interesting features that are worth mentioning. The main difference between FluidCam and many of the other applications is that it is very easy to configure the recording settings (and the player can be moved to the tray even when it is launched as a maximized window). Also, the settings can be managed from the general settings screen without having to go back to the recording screen. Other cool features include: - The option to record only certain areas of the screen - The ability to record when a certain process is in progress, like a download - The option to send the file to a specified remote address - The option to enable "Just in time" previewing - The option to record a network webcam - The ability to set the recording settings automatically at system startup Many settings are in the advanced settings screen, which can be accessed from the settings shortcut that you get when you hit "Record".
